Auto-USB updater script

I thought you guys might find this useful. While I was making my auto root box, I found myself needing to update the software frequently. I came up with a script which pulls the new files over automatically. That's not ideal when working with a headless device.

So, I made a script that mounts the USB thumb drive, if it's plugged in, and copies new versions of my binaries to the device. This allows me to develop on a desktop and test by simply copying to a thumb drive, plugging it into the Raspi, and turning the Raspi on. After using this, the device boots up normally and to make changes to the filesystem you simply plug in a USB drive with changes. They will be replicated to the Raspberry Pi's filesystem on reboot.

Edit your /etc/rc.local file and add the following:
